PRESS RELEASE

In the Attic Fingertips by Naomi Fawcett

Everything you thought you knew is now basically obsolete

Over the course of one hedonistic Halloween, Fingertips explores life as a twenty-something, struggling to find a place outside of a digital world. Inspired by verbatim interviews, this female-led theatre company poignantly dissect the quarter-life crisis, including the issues are faced, the anxieties that are felt, the dreams that are dreamt and the fear that they might never be realised. Discover what sex, love and identity mean to this lost generation, desperate for independence but scared to grow up.

Making their Edinburgh Festival Fringe debut, the critically acclaimed team behind In the Attic present a brave and dynamic piece of new writing from playwright Naomi Fawcett. Developed through workshops and improvisation from the true experiences of real people in real relationships, this thought-provoking work will push audiences to recognise themselves in the obstacles that the characters face.

In the Attic was formed to create inspirational shows promoting gender equality. Fingertips is the first production from this dynamic new company.
