PRESS RELEASE

The Auchtermuchty Food Museum People Eating by Chris Duffy

A celebration of food and photography that is certain to leave you hungry for more

Almost exclusively made of discarded and unwanted photographs of people eating and featuring images of public feasts to intimate meals, extravagant celebrations to mundane routines, this exhibition documents 100 years of food around the world and its place in our lives.

Photographs featured come from the substantial food collection created by Chris Duffy. Gathered and curated over the past 20 years, he has now turned part of his home into a library of food related photographs, books, manuscripts and eating related ephemera. This exhibition marks the beginning of Chris's commitment to share pieces of the collection through The Auchtermuchty Food Museum, which will contribute to the dialogue about our food, how it has shaped our history and how it will impact our future.

At a time when more food related images are produced by us than ever before, these pictures reveal many untold stories about food, fashion, history and people. The exhibition explores our own relationship with food and how meals and moments like these might be remembered in the future.
