PRESS RELEASE

Fear No Colours Mercury Fur by Philip Ridley

'Open your window for fuck's sake. It's a shit hole out there!'

London has fallen into the hands of ultra-violent, machete-wielding rebel gangs, driven to extremes by hallucinogenic butterflies. The British museum has been looted for treasures, the zoo now only exhibits dead animals and children's blood flow freely across the supermarket floors while history is rapidly deleted from public consciousness. Within the carnage, a group of young people surviving by their wits are confronted with the worst choice in the world – is there ever a price too high to save the ones you love?

Philip Ridley's relentlessly brutal masterpiece hurls its audience into a nightmare vision of a world we know all too well. The text that proved too much for Ridley's old publisher, was vilified by the critics and continues to separate audiences and ignite debate a decade on. Fear No Colours are pulling out all the stops to offer an unflinching and passionate production of this increasingly current and important play.

Fear No Colours is a Glasgow-based theatre company committed to visceral and bold productions of contemporary British plays. Following their critically acclaimed debut pieces Cleansed and Phaedra's Love by Sarah Kane at the 2015 Edinburgh Festival Fringe, the company are back and ready to push boundaries even further this season. Fear No Colours are also performing Dark Vanilla Jungle by Philip Ridley at C venues at the 2016 Edinburgh Festival Fringe.
