PRESS RELEASE

Some Riot Theatre A Series of Unfortunate Breakups

by Lucy Burke

Finding love is hard. It's even harder if your soulmate is a global superstar who doesn't actually know you exist

We're living in the age of Tinder, online dating and social media galore, and it seems there are more ways than ever to meet the potential 'one'. Then why is it still so difficult? In fact, why does it now seem harder than ever to negotiate our way through the pitfalls of 21st Century dating?

A Series of Unfortunate Breakups explores the search for love and connection in the modern world and what happens when, as is so often the case, that search doesn't go to plan. Born of real life experiences with a pinch of silliness and a lot more fun thrown in, look on in horror at the hilarity that ensues as our couples bumble their way through doomed relationships and even worse – breakups.

Fresh from sell-out London shows and presented by a cast of recent graduates from top London drama schools, watch as three couples battle their way through the modern world of sex and dating with disastrous results in this new comedy about love, lust and all of the dreaded grey areas in between.

Some Riot Theatre is an emerging company made up of recent graduates from top London drama schools including The Royal Central School of Speech and Drama and Mountview Academy of Theatre Arts. The company was founded by Lucy Burke in 2015, after realising that the lack of a safety net for graduating actors meant that many emerging performers were struggling to make the transition from training into the real world. Some Riot Theatre are committed to creating and producing new writing that is relevant and accessible to a diverse and contemporary audience, whilst supporting and nurturing emerging talent. This show is their debut venture as a company.
