PRESS RELEASE

Gone Rogue Productions Like Dolphins Can Swim by Felicia de Angeli

Wearing, let's be honest, pretty horrendous homemade superhero costumes, Sam and Alice switch between saving the world and trying to save their friendship...

Home from university for the holidays, Sam and Alice are meeting in Sam's back garden to finally fulfil the promise they made, aged just ten, to spend one whole, glorious day as their superhero alter-egos. But while Captain Hero-Man and The Mighty Hedgehog appear not to have changed beyond the necessary accumulation of a few extra superpowers, their friendship has lost its childhood innocence. Recent years have brought grief and secrets, and though they have both been happy to accept denial and hide behind their masks, the masks are slipping and it is becoming impossible to keep these darker issues at bay.

This new, bitter-sweet play explores the challenges many friendships must face with dry wit and brittle honesty. Making peace with ourselves is never easy, but how else can we move on?

Founded in 2012 for that year's Edinburgh Fringe, Gone Rogue returns for the sixth successive year, buoyed by recent success. The company's scope has always been broad, encompassing theatre, musicals, and comedy and is presenting five shows, including Philip Ridley's The Pitchfork Disney, at this year's Fringe – making a total of 17 productions since inception.
